This Week in Crypto

This week the Crypto market continued to grow as we approached a top-end market cap of 2.76 trillion. Although no major moves were made by major coins such as Bitcoin (BTC) or Ethereum (ETH) the sentiment has seemed to remain mostly bullish as recorded levels of BTC in exchanges have continued to plunge to record lows. In addition to the record lows of BTC, other organizations have expressed interest in BTC adoption such as banks, organizations and companies. Most notably more and more celebrities have begun accepting their payments and salary in BTC such as Tom Brady, Aaron Rodgers and Joe Roegan. Furthermore, more and more celebrities are getting into NFTs such as Snoop Dog and Stephen Curry. The Cryptonairz team has been growing in size and events, make sure to tune in on YouTube where we also host daily Crypto news, host various events with notable individuals and even post guides. StrongBlock Updates

StrongBlock has stopped expanding the list of StrongBlock holders who can launch the new DVPN Sentinel nodes. StrongBlock has announced that it will be providing its Node-as-a-Service (NaaS) in collaboration with Fantom (FTM), Polygon (MATIC) and rumor has it Binance (BSC). In the weekly AMA David Moss mentioned that Strong is working on node migration for individuals who have had compromised wallets. Lastly, it was mentioned that a form of fractional node ownership is in the works and that Strong is working on claim routing which will allow users to roll over rewards to new nodes without having to pay fees.
