This Week in Crypto

This week the Crypto market continued to grow as we approached a top-end market cap of $2.96 trillion which is the highest in all of crypto history. There was some negative news which originated from China in regards to Evergrande and from the most recent BTC ETF (Electronically Traded Funds) rejection. However, the crypto market recovered slowly but surely and now seems to have corrected for the next leg up. Bitcoin (BTC) underwent its tap-root upgrade which is supposed to improve its security, flexibility and scalability for crypto uses. The Cryptonairz community has reached over 500 members this week and to celebrate sign ups 500, 501 and 502 obtained free membership for a month or more. The team has been growing in size and events, make sure to tune in on YouTube where we also host daily Crypto news, host various events with notable individuals and even post guides. StrongBlock Updates

StrongBlock has stopped expanding the list of StrongBlock holders who can launch the new DVPN Sentinel nodes. StrongBlock has announced that it will be providing its Node-as-a-Service (NaaS) in collaboration with Fantom (FTM), Polygon (MATIC) and rumor has it Binance (BSC). In the weekly AMA David Moss mentioned that Strong is working on node migration for individuals who have had compromised wallets. Lastly, it was mentioned that a form of fractional node ownership is in the works and that Strong is working on claim routing which will allow users to roll over rewards to new nodes without having to pay fees.
